

Where To Obtain Help With The Legal Process

If you are not represented by an attorney, you may have considerable difficulty complying with the requirements involved in obtaining a divorce. If you feel uncomfortable with this legal process, please retain an attorney immediately. If you believe you cannot afford an attorney, please give this important decision further consideration for the long term consequences may suggest that you should obtain professional legal advice.

You can also consult with the Clerk of Court for information on the availability of legal secretaries (sometimes referred to as pro se divorce consultants) that will assist you in the preparation of the numerous legal documents that are required in even the simplest of divorce actions. These persons cannot provide legal advice, but may be able to help you complete the documentation required in a divorce case.

If your divorce involves a long-term marriage or has significant assets, you are probably in need of sound legal guidance. We urge that you seek legal advice to protect your interests in this divorce action.
